It seems from letters from Japan and Japanese newspapers that the effect of the recent anarchist plot to assassinate the Mikado did not, as was first thought, result in an indorsement of all religious observance by the people, but was simply an attempt to revive the old Shinto beliefs. The minister of education is reported to have said. "In imparting education, the most careful attention should be directed to encouraging the people to reverence the Shinto delices, placing great importance on religious services held in commemoration of their ancestors. A milestonary says that the consequence of this is that the consequence of the Shinto shrines, and some of them result in an indorsement of all relitestiners are marcing their counter to the Shinto skirnes, and some of them are trying to keep them from attendance at the Christian Sunday schools. Se-rious trouble may result from the Chris-tian opposition to this, and the proposed withdrawal of religious liberty which it recently foreshadows.

Comment was made in these columns recently regarding the dissemination of Catholic literature at St. Martin's Church. In connection with this subject, it is learned that there is a parish in Archbishop Ireland's diocese made up almost entirely of converts. On one occasion there were 255 adult converts confirmed the same day, and again the number totaled almost 300. It is said by the paster of the church that he has received almost 1,000 men and women into the church during his administration, and he attributes his success to his activity in distributing books and pamphlets bearing on Catholic faith and practice. He buys them by the thousand and distributes them widely. The movement
